

Masthead Logo

The Iowa Review

Volume 29

Issue 3 Winter

Article 5

1999

Leaves in Fall

Marianne Boruch

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Boruch, Marianne. "Leaves in Fall." The Iowa Review 29.3 (1999): 23-24. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.5187>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

It's just that—bad cello!—
the rondo? I like it, like to play it twice because no words! Because I do it so badly! Delicious part going minor, right down the hole, neither-what I thought-nor-what I dreamt. Dark in there. Strange.

LEAVES IN FALL

They come down, straight down or crooked, fast or drunken. Wind might do it, might call the cruel trick but they're starving anyway, light's sugar
nothing so sweet now,
and then this mysterious business
of turning a drastic color. I rake.
I rake the damn sad things
all morning, past lunch.
What was I thinking?

That certain things have to be done. That the earth orbits slowly. That beauty gives up its beauty. Huge piles of it—maple's yellow, the elm's ghost gray, hackberry with its sulfurous boils curled tight. Maybe someone else said this: the sky is a pearl, darkening.
Or this: it's bad milk, not a cloud
against anything.

So I rake
and drag it all on a tarp to the curb, the heavy scrape scrape of it past birdbath

The dead
lean forward.

lean forward.